

Healthcare Informatics

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Healthcare Informatics Program

In only two years, the Healthcare Informatics program prepares students for a career as a Certified Associate in Health Information Management Systems (CAHIMS). A Health Information Technician is skilled in health information management systems and procedures, has completed an academic program, and has satisfactorily passed a national certification exam, or CAHIM.

A Health Information Technician uses computer applications to assemble, analyze and abstract medical records, and often specializes in coding diagnoses and procedures for reimbursement and research. Additional tasks includes data retrieval for quality assurance activities, transcribe medical reports and medical staff committee meeting minutes, protect confidential patient information, and assist physicians and other health care personnel with appropriate medical record documentation practices.

ACCREDITATION AFFILIATE

The Healthcare Informatics Program has an affiliate accreditation by Healthcare Information and Management Systems Society (HIMSS).

NHA Certifications available: CBCS and CEHRS and CMAA
