PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Sports Management Program

Hocking College's Sports Management program prepares students for many entry-level jobs in the sport and athletic industry including sports business, sports administration, sports marketing, sports communication, sports facilities management, and sports entertainment. The degree also serves as a pathway for students to continue their education to earn an advanced degree in Sports Management.

The curriculum focuses on preparing students to work in sports organizations at the local, collegiate, and professional levels. The program provides students with an education that features real-world amateur and professional sports experiences and interactions with professionals in the industry. In addition to business concepts and theories, students will learn new perspectives and skills in athlete, facilities, and project management, as well as problem-solving, leadership, and ethical decision-making.
